

THE SILVER STATUS.

A correspondent sends us a clipping from the New York Tribune telling what free coinage is and asking if this is so. All the statements of purported facts are true; that is, free coinage means that any holder of bullion 900 fine, can take his bullion to the mint and have it coined without cost. In stating it, the Tribune says: "No royalty or seigniorage to pay, no cost of minting, but a benevolent Government bears all expenses, in order that every corner from near and far, American, European, Asiatic, may take away bright new United States dollars at the rate of one for every 37 1/4 grains of pure silver." As a statement of fact that is correct, but the tone of it is altogether dirty. The writer would convey the idea that a mighty injustice would be performed if that state of affairs existed; still if he had gold dust, or some friend of his from South America or Asia had gold dust that he desired to have converted into coin he would take it to the mint and receive in exchange the coined eagles, or double eagles, or half eagles, as he might desire, and would not feel under any particular obligations to the Government on that account.

Next the Tribune writer explains that Mr. Cleveland meant by independent coinage the undertaking of the United States to coin silver without an arrangement with some of the great nations. Next he attacks the bill which was lately before Congress by saying that it did not contemplate the coining of silver at all, but the taking from the Treasury, paper notes at the rate of $1 29 1/2 for every ounce of bullion, and these notes to circulate as legal tender in payment of all debts. That is correct, except that the bill proposed to leave it optional to the man who carried the bullion to the mint to take the coin or the paper as he pleased. The Tribune says of the coined dollars, that "after many years of anxious effort by the Treasury, it has been possible to get in circulation not more than $60,000,000, because the people will not carry around a large load of silver."

The writer on silver in the New York Tribune is a dishonest man. When he talks about "the vast and weary loads of silver carried by France or Germany," he talks like an idiot as well as a rascal, because there is not $20,000,000 in either country in silver bullion; it is all coined, as he very well knows, fifteen and a half to one, and circulated among the people as good as gold. There is an accumulated mass of silver in China and India, but he has never heard of any silver coming back from either country, except it was said a few years ago that some trade dollars were reshipped to this country, but there is no certainty of that being true. There were more trade dollars coined than the trade of China absorbed, and as they carried no legal tender attribute in this country, although they contained eight grains of silver more each than the standard dollar, they were worth no more in fact than silver bullion, and had to be disposed of for what they would bring; and when this man in the Tribune talks about there being no other plan to exclude the enormous mass of silver outside, he talks as the foolish talk, because silver is just as precious as gold. They maintained their position side by side, except that silver was the better and more favored metal of the two until legislation interfered; they would have continued to have remained side by side, except for that legislation. And when the men who forced that legislation on the country and their friends now talk about the enormous masses to be shipped in, they talk like lunatics, because there is no silver outside to be shipped in, except what the mines of Mexico and South America yield, and the world outside of our own country needs every grain of that product and more too.

The Reno schools are closed on account of the prevalent gripe.
